

18 March Sculpture

March 18, 1915, is a unique day of victory that changed the course of Turkish and world history, proving a nation's determination to exist to all of humanity. The Gallipoli Front is a sacred place of resistance where a nation, refusing to surrender even in the face of inadequate weaponry, harsh climatic conditions, and heavy losses, engraved its love for the homeland and heroism into history forever. The Anatolian women carrying ammunition behind the lines, the soldiers fighting shoulder to shoulder with their commanders, and every individual of that period are parts of this epic. Atatürk's words, "I do not order you to attack, I order you to die," have gone down in history as a legacy that will keep the essence of the Gallipoli spirit alive for centuries. The Gallipoli Victory is not just a military achievement; it is a test of existence that shaped the nation's spirit, will, and collective identity.

Design and Artistic Features of the March 18 Gallipoli Sculpture

The March 18 Gallipoli Victory and Martyrs' Memorial Day Sculpture produced in our workshop has been brought to life with an impressive compositional approach carrying all the weight and spirit of the front. Completed with a bronze coating technique, the work has a multi-figure monument structure that includes the figure of Atatürk, soldier figures, and the Anatolian woman together. Historical symbols such as piles of cannonballs, ammunition, a bell inscribed with "Gallipoli," and rifles are carefully placed in the composition, adding documentary power to the work. The Turkish flag is located at the highest point of the composition, crowning the entire narrative as a symbol of victory. The facial expressions, postures, and clothing of the figures are crafted faithful to the historical reality of the period, with each character positioned to represent a different dimension of the front. The stone-textured surface of the pedestal is an important design element that reinforces the sense of weight and permanence in the entirety of the work. This sculpture is a masterpiece that carries deep meaning both artistically and historically, adding lasting heritage value to public spaces.

Who Is It Suitable For?

The March 18 Gallipoli Sculpture is a meaningful monument solution for municipal squares, martyrdoms, military areas, schools, universities, and all public institutions. The presence of such permanent works in the commemoration ceremonies held every March 18 is an embodied expression of the memory of the nation and the respect felt for the martyrs. The sculpture can be produced specifically for your institution and space with different size, material, and coating options.
