Relief Making Works

Relief is an ancient sculpture technique in which figures or motifs are carved into a surface so that they rise up from the background. In this video featuring our relief works and the production stages of some of them, you can take a closer look at the entire process from raw material to finished piece.

Features of Relief

Our works, produced in three main forms as low relief, mid relief and high relief, are designed with different depth values depending on the intended use and space. Our reliefs, produced using stone, bronze, fiberglass and composite materials, maintain their original appearance for many years thanks to coatings resistant to outdoor conditions. Every detail is carefully crafted by hand; figures, inscriptions and motifs are skillfully transferred onto the surface. Custom size and design orders are available upon request.

Areas of Use

Our relief works are frequently preferred for building facades, monument walls, interior decoration projects, corporate identity designs and public spaces. Municipalities, universities, museums, hotels and private residences are among the most common areas of demand. Our workshop serves institutions and individuals who wish to transform historical events, portrait studies or abstract compositions into permanent works of art through the relief technique, with an experienced team ready to bring every vision to life.
