Person Statue

The human figure sculpture, one of the most deep-rooted traditions in art history, continues to be among the most preferred sculpture types today. A person statue has the power to reflect not only a person's physical appearance but also their posture, mood, lifestyle, and character. The impressive work seen in the image is an original male figure depicted wearing a hat, with a beard, in a reclining position. With his relaxed and self-assured posture, this statue conveys the person's philosophy of life and spirit to the viewer.

The Reclining Man: An Original Composition

This person statue is not an ordinary portrait work. The figure's reclining position, the way he holds the object in his hand, the strong facial expression beneath his hat, and his muscular build give the work an extraordinary dynamism. The surface completed with a golden bronze patina coating provides the statue with both an aesthetic and lasting appearance. Produced entirely by hand in our workshop, this work reflects the person's character down to the finest detail. Even subtle points such as the toes, facial lines, and muscle details have been crafted with great care.

Who Has It Made?

Person statue orders can be placed for different purposes. Families can have a statue made of a loved one who has passed away or whom they wish to honor. Companies may commission a person statue to keep the memory of their founders or legendary leaders alive. Municipalities and public institutions can commemorate historical or contemporary figures who have contributed to the city with a statue in public spaces. Artists and creative individuals can have themselves or those who inspire them expressed through a three-dimensional work of art. Every order results in the production of a single work that carries the unique story of the individual.

Production Process

Person statue production begins with a detailed preparation process. First, photographs and any available video footage of the person are examined. Facial proportions, body structure, and characteristic features are analyzed digitally before moving on to the design stage. The three-dimensional form of the work is then created through clay modeling. Following customer approval, the final production is carried out in bronze casting or polyester resin. In the final stage, patina coating is applied to give the work the desired color and texture.

Material and Size Options

Person statues can be produced in different size and material options. Production at real human scale is the most common preference, although larger sizes are also possible for monumental public space projects. Bronze casting is the most durable option for outdoor projects, while polyester resin offers a more practical and economical solution for indoor use. A choice can be made from gold, antique bronze, silver, and stone-finish coatings.
